Very high insulation of mica and other insulating substances are thus pierced and destroyed by the discharges. The purpose of the present invention is to provide means whereby the electricity which is thus caused to charge the driving-pulley may escape in dependency of the armature, and thus avoid injury thereto. The invention consists in equipping the generator with discharge-points which are supported by bill insulated from the frame of the generator and directed toward the belt-wheel. These points are connected electrically with the earth. A harmless discharge may take place at all times from the pulley to the points, and thus to the earth or to the driving-engine. In the accompanying drawing there is shown an alternate-current electric generator equipped with the discharge device in connection with the driving-engine. Referring to the figure, A represents the belt-wheel of a suitable steam-engine for driving the generator A . The belt-wheel is connected by means of the belt B with the driving-pulley or belt-wheel a of the generator. There is secured to the generator or supported therefrom a plate, C, provided with dischargepoints c, which extend toward the edge of the pulley or belt-wheel a . This plate is insulated from the generator, but electrically connected with the earth or with the engine A. 60...
