Notes On Schools, Exhibitions, And Factories. Tlie Darmstadt Polytechnic. The new Polytechnic at Darmstadt, erected in place of an earlier building, was specially visited in order to see the most recent development of schools for the highest branches of technical teaching. The main building is threestoreyed, and comprises three wings at right angles to it, giving an E-shaped plan. These buildings are devoted to the teaching of mathematics and some branches of natural science, and to the schools of architecture and engineering. In the wing buildings, moreover, the first year students receive their instruction. Opposite to the front entrance to the Polytechnic, and on the other side of the road, are two separate institutes, one of whioh contains the physical and electro-technical schools, and the other the chemical laboratories and class-rooms. In the rear of the main building is the engine-house, from which electric light, and power and heat, are supplied to all these buildings. The Polytechnic, which was begun in 1893, was completed in October 1895 at a cost, including fittings and equipment, of about 120, 000. The main building contains the usual series of drawing offices--a special feature of every technical college in Germany--rooms to contain the collections of models and apparatus, the engineering laboratories, classrooms, lecture-rooms, a large hall, the library and the offices fori the adminstrative staff. r. , - . . . --i The most interesting department of the institute is undoubtedly that devoted to the physical and electro-technical schools....
