Brand New Book ***** Print on Demand *****.Excerpt from Herbert Spencer, Vol. 1 of 1: His Life, Writings, and Philosophy As The world grows older it knows more about its greatest men and finds them out quicker; but in order to be noticed it is necessary for them to be greater than in former times. The idea that men of long ago were of superior mould and larger intellectual stature than those of to-day is a false one, though useful, no doubt, to sustain the doctrine of a lapse from an originally perfect state. Those sentiments which have given rise to and supported the theory of monarchical sovereignty made demigods of military chieftains, of kings and emperors, and endowed them, in the minds of people generally, with all the virtues which which they did not possess but which seemed to be necessary to a properly equipped great man. The same method has pervaded the world of study and of letters. Plato and Aristotle have been esteemed much greater men than any of our degenerate times, and there has been, and still is, a mystical value attached to their least words. Without disparaging these really worthy Greeks, who would be considered good philosophers, as philosophers go in our time, and who, it must be remembered, were far better than they used to run in earlier days, I do not hesitate to aver that the subject of this sketch, for instance, is much greater than either of them. Nor would I say it of him alone, but also of many others, who are not as prominent. The general level of intellectual power is so far raised in modern times that it is exceedingly difficult for any...
